Via Ariosto 32, Cotto, Fivizzano 54013, MS, Italy

Situated just behind St Mark's Square on one of Venice's most elegant streets is Hotel Flora. Originally a seventeenth-century Palazzo, the hotel was once the School of Painting, frequented by great Venetian artists whilst next door is Palazzo Contarini Fasan, heralded as the home of Desdemona, heroine of Othello. The Palazzo later became a small pensione and having remained in the Romanelli family since 1964 has succeeded in maintaining the charm and warmth of a family establishment.

As one enters the small lobby of Hotel Flora there are glimpses of the delightful garden through a glass arch. This is a much sought after venue, away from the hubbub of St Mark's, with its creepers, fountains and flowering shrubs cascading from stone urns - an idyllic setting for morning coffee and brioches or an early evening aperitivo. Inside, there is an atmosphere of elegance and intimacy. The Romanelli family has taken great care in furnishing the 44 rooms so that each is individual in style and character- some with period furniture from the end of the 19th century, others in 18th century Venetian style.

Service is intimate and guests will cherish the peace and quiet at the Hotel Flora after a day's exploration of Venice. The Fenice Theatre, the Accademia Gallery and St Mark's Square are just a few minutes' walk away whilst the gondola ferry can take one across the Grand Canal. Everything is to hand offering guests a memorable and unique experience in this truly magnificent city. The Hotel Flora cannot be too highly recommended but you need to book early
